Eastern War Time Resumed For Summer

COUNCIL VOTES TO SET CLOCKS AHEAD AN HOUR

Change Scheduled To Be Made At 3 O'Clock Sunday Morning

OPPOSITION DIES OUT

Ordinance Given Approval At Special Meeting Friday Night

Eastern War Time will be resumed in Circleville at 3 a. m. Sunday, continuing until October 3.

City council meeting in a special session Friday night passed an ordinance calling for the change in schedule, and Mayor Ben H. Gordon immediately put his name on it. Since the ordinance was drawn as an emergency measure it becomes effective at once, the 3 a. m. Sunday hour being written into the legislation.

All Circleville residents are asked by council to move their clocks ahead one hour when they retire Saturday night. First persons to be affected by the hour change will be the city's Sunday schools and churches, all of which will be operating Sunday on Eastern time.

Joins Other Cities

By changing its time schedule Circleville goes along with most other Ohio cities in voting to bypass the state legislature's approved schedule for Ohio. In February the legislature voted Central War time for Ohio, but most metropolitan areas remained on the Eastern War schedule because railroads, communications, federal offices and many other institutions including buses and railroads continued to operate on the time schedule proposed by Washington. In most rural areas, where farmers favored slower time, the Ohio time schedule was followed.

However, opposition to the fast time schedule by agriculturists has not been so marked in recent weeks, farmers following the sun instead of the clock anyway, as some of them point out.

Council Changes Mind

Circleville council has had the time question before it several times, but sufficient support could not be mustered to pass the measure. The only test vote resulted in defeat for an ordinance which would have changed the measure several weeks ago. At that time effort was made to suspend rules and vote an emergency ordinance, but the ballot of Councilman W. E. Wallace, who said he favored slow time, brought defeat.

Since that time Mr. Wallace has resigned because of press of business. No person has been named as yet to take his place.

Special Meet Called

At council meeting Wednesday evening the ordinance previously balked was brought up for second reading, and a third, or special meeting, was proposed for Friday. Under council rules a two-thirds vote is needed of all regularly elected members to send any measure through as an emergency. Two of council's six members.

United States Holds Only 62 Japs Taken Prisoner In Battle

WASHINGTON, June 5—The War department today for the first time officially revealed that the United States holds only 62 captured-in-combat Japanese prisoners of war in this country.

Despite a maximum of several hundred other Japanese captives held by the Allies in the southwest Pacific, this low figure is in sharp contrast to the army announcement on June 3 that 11,307 U. S. soldiers are now prisoners in Japan, and approximately 18,000 more are listed as "missing in action" in the Pacific area.

Disclosure of the Japanese prisoners, who are now quartered at Camp McCoy, Wis., came in an army report which revealed that 22,110 German and 14,516 Italian captives are being held in 21 camps in the continental United States.

Army officials attribute the reduced number of war prisoners to the fact that the Japanese code of bushido refuses to recognize the existence of captives. According to this military tradition, soldiers falling into enemy hands are regarded as "legally" dead.

In its report, the war department also provided a glimpse of the actual administrative and operational organization of prison camps in this country.

All installations, except prison camps at Angel Island, Calif.; Camp Blanding, Fla., and Fort Meade, Md., are permanent. Combined capacity of the 21 camps, located in 17 states, is approximately 55,000. Plans are underway to move German and Italian prisoners, who are now segregated into separate compounds at Crossville, Tenn., to another camp.

The office of the provost marshal general reported that many prisoners have had farm experience. These will be used only in lots of about 12 or more for such work as cotton picking and harvesting, because of the limited number of military guards. Other prisoners will be employed on road building, irrigation developments, dam construction and similar projects.

Recreational facilities will be supplemented by gifts from private organizations. "Because the prisoners naturally favor the sports of their own countries, standard army athletic equipment kits have not proved generally satisfactory," the army said.

Formal educational courses, dramatics, music and other cultural activities are also included in the camp program. The army quartermaster corps will prepare menus on the basis of "national preferences."

Prisoners will be permitted to organize and administer their own affairs "as much as possible." Spokesmen may be selected to file requests or complaints to the company or camp commander.

CLARK GABLE TO EMERGE FROM ARMY OBSCURITY

LONDON, June 5—Capt. Clark Gable of the United States air force decided today to emerge from the obscurity into which he had sunk after his arrival in the European theatre of operations.

The fighting film star agreed at a bomber station of the United States Eighth Air Force to be photographed with his group and to participate in a mass interview.

Tomorrow at 7:30 p. m. EWT Gable will broadcast as a guest star on the British Broadcasting Corporation's program entitled "Stars and Stripes." At that time he will answer questions put to him by Bebe Daniels, the actress.

Recently Gable has been seen about London looking well and fit and has taken a fuller part of late in air station social activities.

U. S. GUYER DIES

WASHINGTON, June 5—Rep. Ulysses Samuel Guyer, Kansas, ranking Republican member of the house judiciary committee, died early today at naval hospital.

The hospital announced that Guyer died shortly after 5:23 a. m. EWT. He was admitted to the hospital several days ago suffering from a complication of diseases from which he was unable to recover.

The defendants, Dr. R. J. Mainegra, 59, and his son, Cyril M. Mainegra, 32, were also given suspended prison sentences.

The indictment said the father had caused another doctor employed by him to certify that young Mainegra was unfit for service and that the ruse was revealed when the son later passed a physical examination for a large life insurance policy.

NEW ORLEANS, June 5—Fines of $2,000 and $500 were levied against a New Orleans physician and his son, respectively, today for violating the Selective Service law.

FDR'S PLAN TO REOPEN MINES TAKES EFFECT

Back-To-Work Message Sent To All Unions By John Lewis

ACCORD EXPECTED SOON

Way Paved For Negotiated Peace In Strike-Torn Fuel Industry

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON, June 5—John L. Lewis today complicated the coal strike picture when he set a June 20th deadline for the truce won by President Roosevelt effective Monday.

On the heels of the back-to-work messages dispatched to 540,000 striking miners last night, Lewis sent the following telegram to all locals of the union:

"The national policy committee, by unanimous vote, has authorized a return to work on Monday, June 7, up to and including June 20. This action was taken to protect your union and its membership. Let each member cooperate with this policy. By order of the national policy committee."

The telegram was revealed by the United Mine workers policy committee which met yesterday and accepted the recommendation by Lewis that the miners return to work Monday.

WASHINGTON, June 5—President Roosevelt's plan for reopening the coal mines went into effect today as the United Mine Workers union directed cessation of a paralyzing strike on Monday and paved the way for negotiated peace in the strife-torn industry.

As back-to-work messages circulated to the 3,000 local unions of the 540,000 striking miners, UMW Chief John L. Lewis and the coal operators sought again to settle by collective bargaining the wage dispute which has cost the nation 14,000,000 tons of war-vital fuel.

A speedy settlement of the wage dispute was anticipated in some quarters following a meeting between Edward R. Burke, head of the southern operators, Charles O'Neill, chief of the northern delegation and Coal Czar Harold L. Ickes.

Plan Settlement

The three men met, it was said, to formulate plans for a settlement of the negotiations today or Monday.

Lewis and the mine owners had a conference scheduled today. At the same time, renewed efforts will be made by the house and senate Monday to agree on anti-strike legislation aimed at avoiding repetition of such a grave wartime labor crisis.

A 10-man conference committee of the senate and house will seek to iron out differences on legislation already passed to make it a criminal offense to promote a strike in a government-seized industry.

JAPAN'S PUPPET IN PHILIPPINES HIT BY BULLET

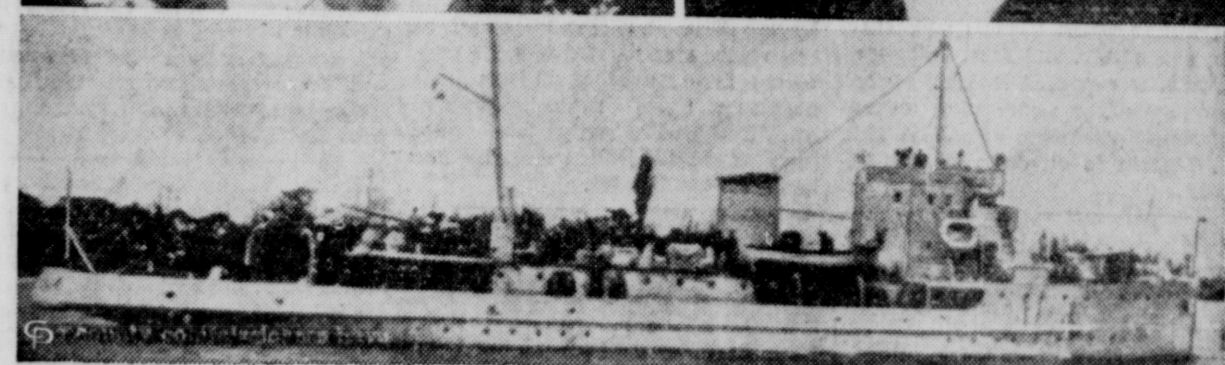

NEW YORK, June 5—Jose P. Laurel, Japan's puppet commissioner of interior in the occupied Philippines, was reported by the Manila radio to have been wounded today by a revolver shot fired by a would-be assassin.

The incident, announced in a Spanish language broadcast reported to the Office of War Information, was said to have taken place on a Manila golf course.

The assailant fled from the scene "immediately and is still at large," according to the broadcast.

The interior commissioner was taken to the General hospital for treatment of two wounds in the left shoulder and another in the left hand, it was said.

Revolt Believed Bringing Argentina To Allies

AN apparent pro-United Nations army revolt in Argentina has driven out the neutral government of President Ramon Castillo, right center, who has taken refuge aboard the gunboat Drummond, lower photo, in the river Plate. The march into the capital by troops like those pictured at top was led by Gen. Pedro Ramirez, left center, who immediately proclaimed "collaboration with the American nations."

ZOOT SUIT GANG LEARNS OF WAR

Hoodlums Beat Sailors, Police Inactive, So Gobs Then Stage Raid

LOS ANGELES, June 5—Seeking vengeance for recent "zoot suit" gangster attacks on servicemen, 20 automobile loads of navy seamen early today sent at least four asserted gang members to hospitals and left a trail of riot calls through east Los Angeles and downtown sections.

"We are out to do what the police have failed to do—we're going to clean up this situation to the satisfaction of ourselves and the public," declared a petty officer, one of several on the apparently well-organized raid.

"Tonight," he said, "the sailors may have marines along."

The seamen said they were looking especially for "zoot suit" gangsters—usually numbering from 30 to 40—who had attacked the wives of two navy men and knifed two seamen in the last few days.

Twenty cars, including 15 taxicabs, formed a convoy which first scoured downtown areas, then East Los Angeles for gangs which had strangely fled to cover.

Four youths, however, appeared at hospitals for treatment and told attendants that they had been set on by sailors.

INJURED AIRMAN RECOVERS, TAKES NURSE AS BRIDE

SOMEWHERE IN NEW GUINEA, June 5—(Delayed)—In what was believed to be the first ceremony of its kind performed in this theatre during the war, an American army nurse and a United States airman who formerly was her patient tonight were married beneath tropic stars.

The bride was Second Lieut. Regina Gallagher of Brooklyn, N. Y., and the bridegroom was Second Lieut. Patrick Bowman of Los Angeles, Calif.

Bowman was navigator of a big B-24 Liberator bomber and it was the old, ever romantic story of a nurse taking care of her patient and finally falling in love with him. Miss Gallagher was a night nurse at a New Guinea hospital and first met her future husband last January.

Tonight's ceremony was held on the anniversary of the Nursing Corps' arrival in the Southwest Pacific and exactly six months after the unit disembarked at New Guinea.

WOMAN TAKES JOB AS CHICAGO STORE BUTCHER

CHICAGO, June 5—Mrs. Ruth Kershner, 40, the mother of two children, went to work today as a butcher, wielding knives, saws and shears at the meat counter of a grocery store.

Said Mrs. Kershner: "I feel that I'm releasing some man for service."

ARGENTINA IN HANDS OF ARMY

Military Board Pledges Former Neutral Nation To Solidarity

BUENOS AIRES, June 5—Argentina was under rule of a military junta today following a successful coup by army leaders who ousted the regime of President Ramon Castillo and pledged the nation to continental solidarity.

The military commission, headed by Gen. Guillermo Rawson, promised the country that Democratic principles will be retained.

The revolt by pro-Allied elements dissatisfied with the Castillo policy of "strict neutrality," under which Argentina remained the only nation in the Western Hemisphere still having relations with the Axis, appeared to have brought the country closer to full accord with the allies.

The new government is composed of Gen. Rawson, Gen. Pedro Ramirez, war minister, Colonel O'Farrell and Vice-Admiral Sabad Sueyro.

First official act of the military body was to pledge the country to the maintenance of democratic principles of government and continental solidarity.

The coup was achieved by the march of 7,000 troops on the government house in Buenos Aires, immediately after which the country was pledged under martial law.

CHURCHILL IN LONDON; CALLS CABINET MEET

Devastating New Blows Expected To Fall On Axis Suddenly

PARLEY HELD IN AFRICA

Prime Minister Believed To Have Put Finishing Touch On Plans

By International News Service
Expectations of early allied military action to break the lull which has existed since conclusion of the campaign in Tunisia mounted steadily today following the return to London of Prime Minister Winston Churchill.

Churchill, who arrived back in London early this morning after a flight from North Africa, immediately summoned his cabinet to inform them on the next steps which the Allied high command has decided to take against the Axis.

No. 10 Downing street, the prime minister's official residence, revealed that Churchill had left Washington a week ago at the conclusion of talks with President Roosevelt and since had been conferring in North Africa.

Informed quarters indicated that Churchill had been empowered to make last-minute decisions on Allied strategy while in North Africa as belief grew that plans were underway to knock Italy out of the war shortly.

Important Decisions
Because of the importance of the decisions Churchill had to make during a journey to Tunisia, it was disclosed, he summoned Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden to his side as an adviser.

Devastating new blows were struck at the Italian mainland and the islands of Sicily and Pantelleria as fears continued to rise among the Italians themselves that they would be the first of European Axis nations to feel the weight of Allied might.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's headquarters said that night assaults were made on Italy and Sicily by bombers while both bombers and fighter-bombers maintained their poundings of the fortress of Pantelleria by night and day.

Airdrome Hit

The principal target in the assaults on Sicily was the Milo airdrome where the runway was pocked with bomb craters and hangars were left burning.

The Italian fears that the mainland or Mussolini's Mediterranean islands may soon be invaded were emphasized by the boasting of the Rome radio that it Duce had prepared thoroughly to meet possible Allied landings.

POSING PASTOR FACES JAIL AS DRAFT EVADER

CHICAGO, June 5—The possibility of spending 10 years in prison for seeking to evade army service through posing falsely as a minister drew closer today to William B. Wernecke, a former leader of the German-American Bund and friend of Herbert Hans Haupt, executed Nazi saboteur.

Wernecke was convicted by a federal court jury on two counts of an indictment charging draft evasion. He faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison on each count.

Judge John P. Barnes, set June 11 for hearing a defense motion for a new trial, but added, "I can't think of anything that would cause me to set aside the verdict of the jury."

Despite the chilling attitude of the judge, the 36-year-old defendant appeared bored by the climax, even to the point of yawning several times.

Wernecke insisted he was first ordained "by revelation" 15 years ago and later was ordained as a minister of the Allied Christian Management Army. The government insisted he didn't "get religion" until he felt the wrath of his draft board on his neck.

Wernecke was convicted by a federal court jury on two counts of an indictment charging draft evasion. He faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison on each count.

Judge John F. Barnes, set June 11 for hearing a defense motion for a new trial, but added, "I can't think of anything that would cause me to set aside the verdict of the jury."

Despite the chilling attitude of the judge, the 36-year-old defendant appeared bored by the climax, even to the point of yawning several times.

Wernecke insisted he was first ordained "by revelation" 15 years ago and later was ordained as a minister of the Allied Christian Management Army. The government insisted he didn't "get religion" until he felt the breath of his draft board on his neck.

FDR'S PLAN TO REOPEN MINES TAKES EFFECT

Back-To-Work Message Sent To All Unions
By John Lewis

plant. The coal mines have been federally operated since May 1.

Ultimatum Issued
The second, general wartime walkout in the coal fields came to its sudden climax in this fashion:

1. President Roosevelt implemented his order to the miners to resume work on Monday with a "work-or-fight" ultimatum, warning that the strikers would lose their draft deferments if they did not return to the pits.

2. The house passed a drastically-revised version of the plant-leisure bill of Sen. Connally (D) Tex.

3. Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, federal administrator of the coal mines, notified Lewis that he "expected" the union leaders to direct the strikers back to work on Monday.

4. Lewis informed Ickes that he had "no power to direct" but that he would recommend such action to the union's policy committee.

5. A hastily-summoned meeting of the 200-man governing body of the UMW voted unanimously to instruct the miners to go back to their jobs.

The last three developments occurred within the space of two hours, bringing to a close a strike crisis which already had closed some vital war plants and threatened to greatly impair America's war production effort. The miners go back to work under their old contract as stipulated by Mr. Roosevelt.

Issues Of Strike
The issues of the strike — the wage increases sought by the union — still are unsettled, but it is possible that the miners and operators will come to terms quickly on a compromise contract and the proceed to a final solution.

In an impassioned speech to the UMW policy committee, Lewis asserted that such a solution could have been reached last Wednesday and the men returned to the mines yesterday, but for the intervention of the War Labor Board which ordered negotiations halted because of the walkout.

Lewis castigated the "little strutting men" of the WLB upon whose shoulders, he said, rested responsibility for the strike. He has consistently defied the board as prejudiced against the miners.

WLB To Decide
Mr. Roosevelt, in his back-to-work order, specified, however, that disposition of the coal-wage crisis would proceed "under the jurisdiction" of the WLB. Lewis always has preferred to deal with Ickes, who twice obtained strike truces.

However, the miners and operators can now come to terms and the agreement can be submitted to and approved by the WLB without further ado or official

NEGRO SOUGHT AFTER ATTACK WITH CORN KNIFE

Squire Smith, Jr., 25-year-old Negro youth, is suffering from deep cuts on his left hand and on his arm where he was wounded early Saturday when an assailant swung a corn cutting knife at him as he was seated on the porch of the Roy Smith home, Maplewood avenue.

Smith said Saturday that he was talking with a daughter of Roy Smith shortly after midnight when the assailant, whom he said was Burl Hill, Maplewood avenue, walked on the porch and slashed at him. "I ought to beat him out of you," Smith quoted Hill as saying before he swung the long-bladed knife. The wounded man said his hand and arm were cut when he raised the arm to keep the knife from striking his face.

First aid was given the injured youth at Berger hospital, nine stitches being required to close the hand wound.

Smith filed a charge of cutting with intent to wound against Hill in police court. So far no arrest has been made.

Police are hunting Hill.

recognition of the board by Lewis. The latter called off the strike after a personal message from Ickes and yet the board's position that negotiations cannot proceed during a walkout was upheld.

Principal issue to be settled is the portal-to-portal (underground travel) pay question, since the WLB previously denied Lewis' demands for an outright $2-a-day wage rate increase. Lewis then sought $2.25 a day in portal payments, while the operators offered 80 cents.

On the first day of the strike, however, Lewis offered to compromise on $1.50, but the operators declined. The union president made it clear that such a compromise would be temporary, pending final determination of the question by a special commission.

Retroactive Pact
The WLB has ruled that any settlement will be retroactive to April 1, the date when the old union contract expired. Negotiations for a new agreement have continued intermittently since then. A two-day strike occurred May 1, followed by two 15-day truces and the second walkout last Monday at midnight.

"We have the assurance of the President that as soon as the mine workers return, the disposition of the dispute will forthwith proceed," Lewis told the policy committee. "We interpret this to mean that collective bargaining will proceed forthwith, with the operators acting in good faith to achieve a solution forthwith."

"We shall demand and expect that justice and equity will be granted to the miners by the lawfully constituted agencies of our government, in due course."

COUNCIL VOTES TO SET CLOCKS AHEAD AN HOUR

Change Scheduled To Be Made At 3 O'Clock Sunday Morning

Julius Helweggen and Frank A. Lynch, are ill and unable to attend council sessions. The other four, providing a two-thirds margin, favor fast time. They are J. D. Mason, Boyd Horn, George Crites and W. M. Reid. All four voted for the time change at Friday's meeting, so the change became official after Mayor Gordon put his name on it.

County Auditor Forrest Short said Saturday that the county commissioners have already decided to keep the clock in the courthouse on the slow time schedule. He said there is little likelihood that the commissioners will change their minds. In most districts the courthouse has followed the county seat.

Only city in south central Ohio which is now operating on slow time is Washington C. H. where it is indicated the time will be changed during the next week. Lancaster was first to go on fast time, then Columbus changed its hours, and then Chillicothe.

It was reported without confirmation Saturday that Ashville council may vote next week to go on fast time.

WIFE DROPS CHARGE

Charges of assault and battery filed against William Amos, West Corwin street, by his wife were dismissed Friday afternoon in Mayor Ben H. Gordon's court at the request of Mrs. Amos. Amos, whose arrest was asked in a state highway patrol radio broadcast, appeared voluntarily at police headquarters. Police said he had been in Chillicothe.

CRETE: Gateway of Invasion?

The island of Crete, which the Germans stormed and captured at great cost in defiance of Prime Minister Churchill's promise that it would be held at any cost, offers an ideal stepping stone into occupied continental Europe.

In addition to its strategic importance, lying athwart a direct route from the mighty British base at Alexandria to Greek ports in the Aegean sea, the people have been impervious to Axis propaganda and collaboration technique. The determination of the Creteans to go all-out in behalf of the Allies was tragically illustrated last year when hundreds were slain by German occupation forces in a pitched battle in one port. Rumors reached the port that a substantial British convoy was en route.

The belief of an invasion had been deduced from the information from a fishing boat crew of having seen an impressive convoy steaming towards the port.

The convoy was in fact swinging northward to avoid Axis concentrations along the north coast of Africa but was loaded with supplies and reinforcements for Alexandria.

A Tragically Wrong Guess
The patriots of the port figured matters out as best they could and struck at the Germans that night, setting fires to warehouses, igniting ammunition dumps, killing sentries and throwing the invaders into great confusion.

If the convoy had steamed into the port, the British would have found the Germans with their hands full in repressing the uprising.

When the abortive attempt to aid the Allies had been put down, the Germans exacted a terrific revenge, lining up scores accused of complicity in the plot before firing squads.

Cretean and British troops, remnants of the Allied forces defending the island, still haunt the mountain fastness and stab out in story book fashion at the invaders.

STEPPING STONE—Crete lies in the pathway from Great Britain's mighty base at Alexandria to the Axis-held Greek coast.

The sympathetic populace, it can be presumed, manage to get food and supplies to these hideouts.

Ceaseless Battle
In the event of an invasion the Germans would find their rear harried and stung repeatedly by these battle veterans of the hills and mountains, who have managed to keep out of Axis clutches. If planes could now deliver weapons and ammunition, the Germans would have a never-ending battle on their hands in Crete.

The Greek and Cretean peoples have suffered more intensely than any other peoples of Europe. Their resistance was the toughest and the most prolonged. Italian Dictator Mussolini's best troops hammered away at the Greeks and could make no headway until Germany's Wehrmacht took over the assignment of subduing the Greeks which they did in short order.

Although defeated by overwhelming forces, the Greeks have not given up their allegiance to

ASHVILLE

The Reverend Hicks, Groveport, pastor of the Church of Christ in Christian Union, here, with John Barton, Sunday school superintendent, and other active ones of the church are making improvements to the church grounds including walks to the church. Sure a fine improvement both in use and appearance.

The village council will be in regular session Monday evening, the first one of the month. The street work which had been contemplated earlier in the season, cannot move forward, because of not being able to secure needed material.

Miss Louise Carley a member of the WAACS organization, receiving her first and primary training in a Texas school, has been transferred to an air corps unit near Denver, Colorado. In a letter to the home folks here, she says she likes the place and work very much.

John Winter, from over Fairfield county way, residing upon what is known here as the "Swope Farm", was a business caller yesterday at court headquarters. Mr. Winter takes an optimistic view of things as they exist now, including the farm crop outlook. Said the corn soon will be all planted and that while the growing wheat will not be a bumper crop it could be a lot worse.

The boy scout troop, composed of some near 25 members, has decided along with their scout master, Charles Eversole, to do one of their "good turns" the scouts are noted for and which is a part of their work and training. A. W. Graham in Grant hospital for observation and maybe an operation, has a perfectly fine growing garden made up in Graham's style of doing things and these good troopers are taking time out to see to it that his mentioned vegetable patch is kept free of weeds and properly cultivated. We'll be seeing what kind of a job these youngsters actually do.

Harry Wellington showed us yesterday evening a freak in form of a new growth potato, which in a closely packed bin, had grown partly inside another one, doing a good job of it. Got the specimen from a friend worker up at the Air Base, he said.

With the stoppers all plugged in with no rain today, corn will be most all planted. And that planted is getting in double time growing both by day and these hot nights.

Kermit C. Clum, son of A. C. and Mrs. C. Clum, has been a member of the navy since May 27 and is getting his first sailor experience on a patrol boat eastern shore, U. S. A., Manhattan Beach, N. J. The other son, Maurice A. Clum, is stationed at Camp Blanding, Florida. He is in a medical corps division and well pleased with army life.

They used to be called in the old print shop days, printers' devils, those youngsters just starting in to learn what it was all about in a printing office. But that would neither sound nice or apply well to those four nice and bright young ladies just making a start at the local print shop. By name, those we are telling about are the Misses Leda Diehl, Louella Williams, Doris Neal and Mary Rinehart. And here are best and kindest wishes to these kiddies that they all may like their job and stick to it until they have at least learned how to tame up those troublesome type lice.

Devastating New Blows Expected To Fall On Axis Suddenly

der naval or air bombardment, had been made ready to meet any eventuality.

The Axis, particularly Germany, appeared to have been handed a severe diplomatic setback on this side of the Atlantic by the overthrow of President Ramon Castillo's government in Argentina. Castillo, adhering to what he had termed "strict neutrality," had refused to sever diplomatic relations with the Axis after all other nations in the Western Hemisphere had done so.

Allies Favored
The coup yesterday placed Argentina under control of a pro-Ally military commission which placed the country under martial law. It pledged, however, that democratic principles would be retained and declared that Argentina would work the hemisphere solidarity.

Washington reports indicated that the United States was preparing for early recognition of the new government of Argentina.

The Soviet air force proved conclusively to the Germans that any air blows the Nazis can deliver henceforth will be answered in full measure when Russian airmen, retaliating for the 500-plane assault on Kursk, sent 520 craft to pummel the Nazi base of Orel.

Red Airmen Strike
Orel, 80 miles north of Kursk and strategic Nazi base on the northern sector of the southern front, was handed a blow equal in its devastating effort to many that the Allies have struck in western Europe, Moscow said.

There was ground action on five sectors of the long Russian front from west of Rostov to the north-west Leningrad area, but the fighting generally had little significance.

American and Australian fliers of the Southwest Pacific command continued to batter Jap bases north of the commonwealth. Principal blows were aimed at Nipponese landing fields in northern New Guinea and seaplane bases of the enemy.

Postmaster Hulise Hays warned Circleville district persons who are mailing applications to the Columbus mailing center for War Ration Book 3 that they must exercise more care in preparing and mailing their applications.

Hays said that postage must be on the mail, that they must be signed and that they must be filled out with ink or typewriter.

The postmaster estimated that 50 percent of the applications which are taken to the postoffice are not acceptable, either to the postoffice or to rationing officials who are preparing War Ration Book 3 for mailing.

The gobs came back to town and their concentration of cars brought a riot call to the Metropolitan police. Squad cars rushing from all close-in stations were joined by four carloads of heavily-armed shore patrolmen.

Seventeen sailors were held for the shore patrol without formal charges. The rest dispersed.

The present outbreak of zoot suit gang terrorism apparently began last Sunday when Joe Coleman, sailor stationed at the navy's Elystan Park training depot, was beaten by a gang.

The same gang later set upon 20 other servicemen in the same vicinity.

There were some pro-fascists among the former president's opposition, but the vast majority of those participating in the overthrow of Castillo are supporters of Democracy.

There were some disturbances in the city, mostly resulting from demonstrations in support of the revolt, but conditions generally were normal.

WASHINGTON, June 5—With the Axis powers about to lose their last diplomatic foothold in the Western Hemisphere, the American government today was preparing to extend early recognition to the new pro-Ally regime in Argentina.

The swift success of the Argentine military revolt was hailed in authoritative quarters as a great victory for the United Nations.

Under the new regime, Argentina is expected shortly to sever diplomatic relations with Germany, Italy and Japan, and to cooperate more closely in the defense of the American hemisphere.

THIEF STEALS CIGARETS FROM MEN IN SERVICE

Here's another story of the "meanest thief".

Kiwanis club is collecting pennies, nickles, dimes and any other amount of money available with which to buy cigarettes for boys in service overseas.

Friday afternoon a sneak thief took the glass jar being used for collection at the William Hickey beer parlor, West Main street, and stole several dollars from it. The broken jar was found in a wash room.

The thief cheated some of Uncle Sam's fighting men out of many hundred smokes by his action. Police Chief William McCrady said he hopes to make an arrest.

dark Thursday evening, all day Friday and again Saturday. Much of the hunting was considerable distance south of the spot where the wader was last seen in the river's swift current. Some boatmen planned to row as far south as the Ross county line, believing the current might have carried her that far. There is also possibility that she might have been caught on a snag near the place where she was last seen.

Police continued to hold William Jackson, 16, East Union street, for investigation. Whether charges will be filed against the youth, against whom police has other complaints, will depend on additional investigation. The drowned girl's brother, Herbert Jr., told Chief W. F. McCrady that Jackson pulled her out of shallow water into deep water and then let her go, the current pulling her under. Jackson denies this.

The investigation is being conducted by McCrady, Sheriff Charles Radcliff and Juvenile Officer John Kerns.

Long grappling hooks were taken to the river Friday since the water is very deep near the scene of the drowning.

AWOL PARATROOPER ON WAY BACK TO ARMY CAMP

Private Paul Ely, 22, who expects some day to be a paratrooper if he can stay out of the hoosegow long enough to be trained for service, was taken to Fort Hayes, Columbus, Saturday, by military policemen. Ely had been held in Circleville jail since Friday morning when he was arrested in the American Hotel where he was registered under an assumed name.

Ely is absent without leave, the army men told police, his violation being his second in a few weeks. He was returned from Columbus to Fort Benning, Ga., recently after being AWOL. Punishment was light at that time, but it is expected to be more severe now.

The soldier also was faced with civil action prior to his return after pawning the $50 watch owned by a daughter of Harvey Kirby, Circleville, for $20 in a Columbus shop. It was Kirby's complaint that sent him to jail in the first place.

CRETE: Gateway of Invasion?

By Central Press

The island of Crete, which the Germans stormed and captured at great cost in defiance of Prime Minister Churchill's promise that it would be held at any cost, offers an ideal stepping stone into occupied continental Europe.

In addition to its strategic importance, lying athwart a direct route from the mighty British base at Alexandria to Greek ports in the Aegean sea, the people have been impervious to Axis propaganda and collaboration technique. The determination of the Creteans to go all-out in behalf of the Allies was tragically illustrated last year when hundreds were slain by German occupation forces in a pitched battle in one port. Rumors reached the port that a substantial British convoy was en route.

The belief of an invasion had been deduced from the information from a fishing boat crew of having seen an impressive convoy steaming towards the port.

The convoy was in fact swinging northward to avoid Axis concentrations along the north coast of Africa but was loaded with supplies and reinforcements for Alexandria.

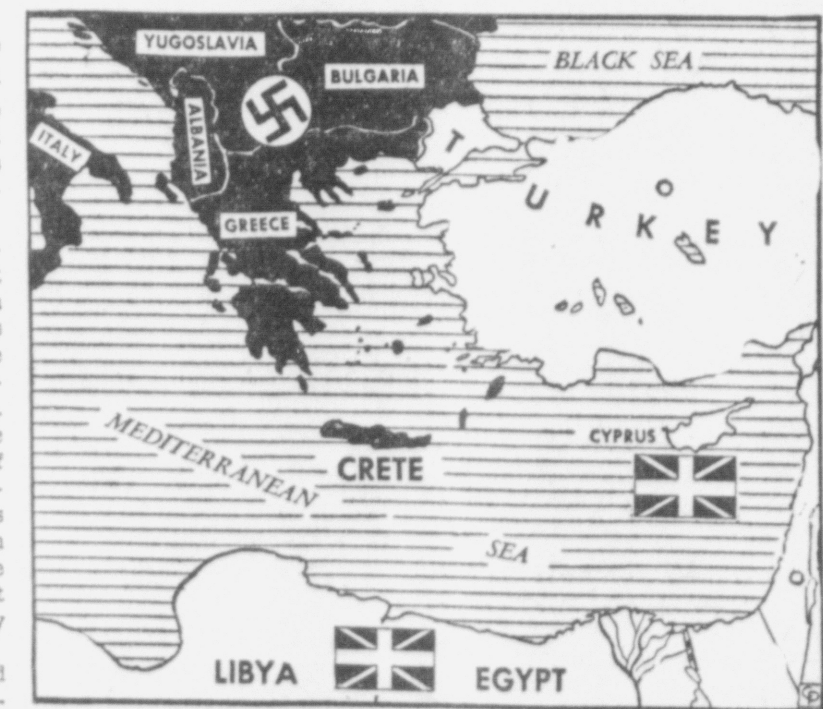

A Tragically Wrong Guess

The patriots of the port figured matters out as best they could and struck at the Germans that night, setting fires to warehouses, igniting ammunition dumps, killing sentries and throwing the invaders into great confusion.

If the convoy had steamed into the port, the British would have found the Germans with their hands full in repressing the uprising.

When the abortive attempt to aid the Allies had been put down, the Germans exacted a terrific revenge, lining up scores accused of complicity in the plot before firing squads.

Crete and British troops, remnants of the Allied forces defending the island, still haunt the mountain fastness and stab out in story book fashion at the invaders.

STEPPING STONE—Crete lies in the pathway from Great Britain's mighty base at Alexandria to the Axis-held Greek coast.

The sympathetic populace, it can be presumed, manage to get food and supplies to these hideouts.

Ceaseless Battle

In the event of an invasion the Germans would find their rear harried and stung repeatedly by these battle veterans of the hills and mountains, who have managed to keep out of Axis clutches. If planes could now deliver weapons and ammunition, the Germans would have a never-ending battle on their hands in Crete.

The Greek and Cretan peoples have suffered more intensely than any other peoples of Europe. Their resistance was the toughest and the most prolonged. Italian Dictator Mussolini's best troops hammered away at the Greeks and could make no headway until Germany's Wehrmacht took over the assignment of subduing the Greeks which they did in short order.

Although defeated by overwhelming forces, the Greeks have not given up their allegiance to the Allied cause. German punishment has been so severe that the Allies made arrangements to alleviate conditions as far as possible through supplies delivered by the neutral ships of Sweden.

Ancient City Plastered

The ancient city of Argos, which had a pre-war population of about 8,000, ranked with the oldest cities of the world. When the German came, he came with swarms of planes, which repeatedly plastered the city until it was completely razed.

Under plans being developed in the United States, the city of Argos will be rebuilt through funds raised in the Greek Orthodox church of Los Angeles. Archbishop Athenagoras of New York City has mapped out plans for post-war rehabilitation of these communities in our homeland.

Each parish of the Greek Orthodox church in the United States will be asked to sponsor the reconstruction of a specified city and called on for contributed funds to assist in this work.

WAR PROGRESS

THE peril of the free nations was so great when the United States entered the war, and there were so many things to be done, that most Americans have not yet realized the immense progress made by American enterprise. An impressive and reassuring survey was given the other day by Walter Lippmann in his New York Tribune column. Here are a few of the high points.

He finds that the seemingly impossible goals set for arming this nation have been reached, and output is so great that formerly baffling problems are solved. Instead of a lack of nearly everything needed for the big struggle, there begins to be enough for almost every purpose. The big rubber famine is eased. Likewise the gasoline problem, the problem of escort vessels, and so on. The submarine peril, which until lately has been the greatest dread, is apparently under control. Complete understanding and cooperation with the allies has been achieved, including unity of operation with Russia. The dissolution of the Comintern has helped much. Recent allied staff discussions at Washington were very satisfactory. Italy is knocked almost out of the war. The Japanese peril, although it has not been met by the full power of this nation, is considerably reduced.

Obviously there is still much to be done, but the free nations are on their way. With internal unity there can be no doubt of complete victory, possibly sooner than has been expected.

FEMININE FARMERS

WHEN men go to war, women perform take on strange new tasks. Women are working in factories, driving taxis and street cars, acting as school guards, even serving as boiler-makers. In the residential suburbs they are mowing lawns and doing the outdoor jobs.

In many European countries, and certainly in Asiatic and African lands, the women do much of the heavy work on the farms. They plough and harrow, sow and reap, root out stumps and rocks.

With farm labor so scarce, women may yet be called on to fill the agricultural gap. So far this has not been done to any appreciable extent. But the sunburnt and powerful peasant woman who is a familiar sight on Balkan farms may yet be seen on the American countryside.

A definition that originated before the last war is now more valid than ever: "Life is just one dam thing after another."

NO CONTINENTAL INVASION

WASHINGTON — The most significant fact regarding the aftermath of the Roosevelt-Churchill conferences is that the Nazis are continuing to take troops out of Western Europe and pile them into Russia.

This means one of two things:

1. The Nazis are not worried over the prospect of an Allied invasion of Europe.
2. Hitler is determined to make one last gamble, throwing all he has into Russia, in a win or lose attempt to take the Soviet out of the war.

Diplomatic information coming from neutral countries is unmistakable that German troops have been withdrawn from (a) Norway, even though there is talk of a British landing operation there; from (b) France, despite newspaper gossip about a cross-Channel invasion; also from (c) southern Italy, despite daily Allied bombings of that area.

Apparently the Nazis figure on letting the Italians defend their own homeland, and reckon that the islands of Sicily and Sardinia are as good as gone anyway. At any rate German military activity inside Italy is confined to the industrial North, where strong fortifications are being erected.

All this would indicate that Hitler figures Italy is more or less of a weight around his neck and that he would be glad to drop it just as long as he can keep the Allies from penetrating beyond Italy. And with the Alps to help him, this should be possible — at least until after he finishes his great and last gamble in Russia.

NO LAND INVASION IN '43

The opinion of this columnist, purely personal, is that both of the above deductions are true, and that there will be no real land invasion of Europe this year (the islands of Sicily and Sardinia being expected), and also that Hitler, apparently confident of this, will do his utmost to take Russia out of the war this Summer.

These deductions are relatively simple and can be drawn by any good military observer. Since the German General Staff has some of the best military strategists in the world, Hitler's present movement may be based on similar deductions. At any rate here they are:

1. No successful invasion of Western Europe can take place without a terrific, relentless pounding of Axis industry and Axis fortifications from the air. This has only just begun. As of March the United States had only about 200 Flying Fortresses in England, and the raids over the continent were mere flea bites compared with what is necessary and what is now taking place. A good many weeks of this pounding will have to continue before an invasion of Western Europe — where Stalin wants it most — could take place successfully.
2. Churchill has always turned thumbs down on sacrificing any large body of British troops in invading Western Europe. This is not new. It was his policy when Molotoff and Stalin urged and begged him for a 2nd Front all of last Summer. It was also reported to be his position at Casablanca where a 2nd Front was definitely promised. In other words, when days everyone seems to have learned a little medical knowledge. There are several hot subjects for the amateur self-diagnosticians, but none more pertinent than angina pectoris—pain in the chest, heart pang. The medical profession has been discussing it avidly for the last few years, and this has filtered out to all strata of society.

Any business man who falls dead on the golf links has had a "heart attack." In fact, anyone over the age of 30 who dies suddenly at all, unless at the hands of the common hangman, dies of a "heart attack." It may be one of a thousand things—apoplexy, heat stroke, embolism, lymphaticism; but for the sidewalk diagnosticians it is just labelled "heart attack."

Effect on Living

This does no harm to the victim but for us, the living, it may have very sad and troublesome consequences. If the taking-off is on the golf links, as mentioned, the other three members of the foursome within the following week develop vague pains around the heart and seek advice from a practitioner who solemnly takes the blood pressure, does an electrocardiogram and makes a pronouncement.

It is a credit to the essential honesty of the medical profession that most of these announcements are reassuring. In these days when the conversational atmosphere is filled with "heart attacks," anybody, any time, may develop premonitory symptoms of dissolution. If he falls into the hands of an even mildly unscrupulous practitioner, he is putty in those hands. He can get the liver and lights scared out of him as thoroughly and rapidly as is ever possible to do so.

I had an instance of this the other day. An old friend of mine had been having some heart pain and had sought advice and was told that the third lead in the electrocardiogram was "suspicious" and that his tonsils should come out. He asked me to check up and even I could tell that his symptoms were not those of angina.

The pain was not pain, but a

CHAPTER TWENTY

AS JEAN stood on the dark, fog-drenched hillside watching the gray mist closing in around the black shadow of the boat, hearing the dimming roar of its engine, her first sick shock of disappointment slowly gave way to bitter thought. Did this necessarily mean that Curley and Rosita were mixed up in some international smuggling or sabotage work? Or were they merely ignoring the law for a secret boat ride? They would think, those two, that such a risk would add to a ride's romantic value. Or maybe this was Curley's way of repaying Jean, herself, for her cool indifference. In her confused state of mind she hardly knew which was preferable, or what she ought to do about it. She could stay until they returned, of course.

Because the idea was abhorrent to her, she somehow felt it was a duty. Dismally she settled back down upon the cold rock, muttering they WOULD pick a night like this for a joyride.

Curley was complaining, too, as the unlighted boat picked its way slowly through the heavy seas, cleaving a path through the sheets of fog about it.

Rosita laughed. "My poor Curley!" she taunted. She snuggled closer against him and took the light scarf from her shoulders to wrap about his neck.

"Hey!" Curley cut down the engine to protest. "Stop that! Do you want to freeze?"

Rosita knotted the scarf beneath his chin with a mischievous giggle. "Do you know what my mother did once?" she cried in a throaty voice of satisfaction.

Curley raised an eyebrow. "For Pancho?"

"For Pancho," the Mexican girl echoed reverently. "She waited for him once three nights and three days without food, out on the island, and then she took him to the hacienda on a night such as this in a small boat and hid him till the troops had gone. Miguel, he help her." The girl raised her small face. Her black hair streamed back in the damp wind. "Many times," she gloated, "my mother she hide the great desperado."

"Some guy, that Villa, eh?" Curley gave the eager girl a casual grin. She returned his glance with burning eyes.

"You could be great, my Curley!" Curley chorled. "Who, ME?"

"Yes!" Her tiny hands clutched his arm in urgent coaxing. "You could be a great desperado—like Villa—if you work hard!"

Curley threw back his head and shouted with laughter. "If I work hard and be a bad boy, huh," he chorled. "And would you hide me from the troops, my little black angel?"

Her voice was solemn as an oath.

"I would hide you where my mother she hid him," she promised.

"Where was that?"

She laughed with a tantalizing ring of power, and laid her small, cold cheek against his sleeve. "Some day," she murmured, eyes glowing with mischief, "eef you are veree nice, I may have to tell you, my Curley."

Curley cut the engine down still further. "Come on, you Mexican minx," he grinned. "Give out with the road map to this hideaway. After all, this job we're on now isn't exactly legal. The Coast Guard might show up any minute, and we'll have to spend the rest of the night there."

She shivered with hopeful delight, but kept her secret. "The Coast Guard won't come," she told him lightly.

"Now, how do you know that?"

"Sometimes," she laughed mockingly, "my Curley he is veree stupid. Did I not tell you I would learn that tonight in the chapel?"

"Sure you did," Curley agreed impatiently, "but I didn't see you learning it."

She laughed again. She was having a wonderful time. "There are many things I must each you. Many things that only Miguel and I know," she whispered. "I will tell you now about this one. Did you not see the candles on the altar?"

"Sure I did."

"Miguel, he light them."

"Okay. So what?"

"Did you not see how many there were?"

Curley calculated thoughtfully. "Three, weren't there?"

"That is right!" She patted his arm proudly. "There were three for one veree good reason. Tonight, Miguel go to the small cliff which is above the Coast Guard station. He watch. Sometimes the Coast Guard boat she go north first, then south. Sometimes she go to the south, then to the north. When she go north first, then he put five candles on the altar and we do not go out to the island. But when she go south, then I see three candles and I know it will be safe to take the boat. The Coast Guard she will not be back until after the midnight."

"Not bad," Curley grinned admiringly. His grudging approval went to her head.

"You are luckee, my Curley, you have found Rosita and Miguel to help you." In one swift, exultant movement, her arms were around him, her full petal lips crushed against his.

Curley thrust her away to make a dive for his sombrero that she had knocked off in her sudden assault.

"Hey, control yourself, you wild Latin!" he yelled as he secured the sombrero strap under his chin

again. "Think the Coast Guard would believe my hat WALKED out here?"

She laughed at him adoringly as he glowered at her, absorbedly watching him hunch his shoulders to light his cigaret, then hold his wristwatch to a small light on the dashboard.

He gave a sharply apprehensive whistle at the time. "We'd better be getting along, or we'll meet the cutter on the way back." He opened up the engine and the small boat roared ahead.

Time dragged on for Jean. Despite her heavy weariness, the stone continued to grow colder and harder. She felt chilled to the bone. She got up and tried walking up and down. The path was not made for speed, being too full of hidden holes. The soggy weeds swished about her ankles.

Twice she thought she heard the boat returning, but it was only an angrier boom of the surf. Once the eerie call of an owl frightened her. And she screamed outright as a long, white branch arched across the path like a crawling snake.

She made her way back to her rock and sank down on it again, her heart still pounding from its fright. That was a fool's errand she was on tonight, she told herself, and it would serve her right if she did break a leg or get bit by a snake. What would she discover further by staying on? Suppose they were out on business for a sabotage gang? They'd bring back orders—that's what they'd bring—which she wouldn't be able to see. Then why was she waiting?

But in her heart she knew she didn't believe they were on any mission more important than a romantic adventure. And she would know that by listening to them when they returned—seen on a dark night she would know. And she would be free once and for all, then, of this attraction that plagued and maddened her.

After this half-thought-of honesty, she felt easier. She curled into a more comfortable position on the rock. She remembered Melvin in the swift, slangy, New York days, when life had seemed bright and secure. And then all at once he was with her, in her kitchenette in the Lexington avenue apartment, mixing drinks for the gang on the chromium square of table and dishing the dirt—the inner dirt.

"Look, Toots," he was saying, cocking a weary eyebrow at the dining room door and lowering his voice to a confidential sotto voce, "now this is absolutely in the family. But I'm telling you—"

She was awakened suddenly by a shock that sent an electric chill through her cold, numb body. She blinked dazedly into a bright light!

WAR PROGRESS

THE peril of the free nations was so great when the United States entered the war, and there were so many things to be done, that most Americans have not yet realized the immense progress made by American enterprise. An impressive and reassuring survey was given the other day by Walter Lippmann in his New York Tribune column. Here are a few of the high points.

He finds that the seemingly impossible goals set for arming this nation have been reached, and output is so great that formerly baffling problems are solved. Instead of a lack of nearly everything needed for the big struggle, there begins to be enough for almost every purpose. The big rubber famine is eased. Likewise the gasoline problem, the problem of escort vessels, and so on. The submarine peril, which until lately has been the greatest dread, is apparently under control. Complete understanding and cooperation with the allies has been achieved, including unity of operation with Russia. The dissolution of the Comintern has helped much. Recent allied staff discussions at Washington were very satisfactory. Italy is knocked almost out of the war. The Japanese peril, although it has not been met by the full power of this nation, is considerably reduced.

Obviously there is still much to be done, but the free nations are on their way. With internal unity there can be no doubt of complete victory, possibly sooner than has been expected.

FEMINE FARMERS

WHEN men go to war, women perform take on strange new tasks. Women are working in factories, driving taxis and street cars, acting as school guards, even serving as boilermakers. In the residential suburbs they are mowing lawns and doing the outdoor jobs.

In many European countries, and certainly in Asiatic and African lands, the women do much of the heavy work on the farms. They plough and harrow, sow and reap, root out stumps and rocks.

With farm labor so scarce, women may yet be called on to fill the agricultural gap. So far this has not been done to any appreciable extent. But the sunburnt and powerful peasant woman who is a familiar sight on Balkan farms may yet be seen on the American countryside.

A definition that originated before the last war is now more valid than ever: "Life is just one dam thing after another."

The WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON

NO CONTINENTAL INVASION

WASHINGTON — The most significant fact regarding the aftermath of the Roosevelt-Churchill conferences is that the Nazis are continuing to take troops out of Western Europe and pile them into Russia.

This means one of two things:

1. The Nazis are not worried over the prospect of an Allied invasion of Europe.
2. Hitler is determined to make one last gamble, throwing all he has into Russia, in a win or lose attempt to take the Soviet out of the war.

Diplomatic information coming from neutral countries is unmistakable that German troops have been withdrawn from (a) Norway, even though there is talk of a British landing operation there; from (b) France, despite newspaper gossip about a cross-Channel invasion; also from (c) southern Italy, despite daily Allied bombings of that area.

Apparently the Nazis figure on letting the Italians defend their own homeland, and reckon that the islands of Sicily and Sardinia are as good as gone anyway. At any rate German military activity inside Italy is confined to the industrial North, where strong fortifications are being erected.

All this would indicate that Hitler figures Italy is more or less of a weight around his neck and that he would be glad to drop it just as long as he can keep the Allies from penetrating beyond Italy. And with the Alps to help him, this should be possible — at least until after he finishes his great and last gamble in Russia.

NO LAND INVASION IN '43

The opinion of this columnist, purely personal, is that both of the above deductions are true, and that there will be no real land invasion of Europe this year (the islands of Sicily and Sardinia being expected), and also that Hitler, apparently confident of this, will do his utmost to take Russia out of the war this Summer.

These deductions are relatively simple and can be drawn by any good military observer. Since the German General Staff has some of the best military strategists in the world, Hitler's present movement may be based on similar deductions. At any rate here they are:

1. No successful invasion of Western Europe can take place without a terrific, relentless pounding of Axis industry and Axis fortifications from the air. This has only just begun. As of March the United States had only about 200 Flying Fortresses in England, and the raids over the continent were mere flea bites compared with what is necessary and what is now taking place. A good many weeks of this pounding will have to continue before an invasion of Western Europe — where Stalin wants it most — could take place successfully.

2. Churchill has always turned thumbs down on sacrificing any large body of British troops in invading Western Europe. This is not new. It was his policy when Molotov and Stalin urged and begged him for a 2nd Front all of last Summer. It was also reported to be his position at Casablanca where a 2nd Front was definitely promised. In other words, when days everyone seems to have learned a little medical knowledge. There are several hot subjects for the amateur self-diagnosticians, but none more pertinent than angina pectoris—pain in the chest, heart pang. The medical profession has been discussing it avidly for the last few years, and this has filtered out to all strata of society.

Any business man who falls dead on the golf links has had a "heart attack." In fact, anyone over the age of 30 who dies suddenly at all, unless at the hands of the common hangman, dies of a "heart attack." It may be one of a thousand things—apoplexy, heat stroke, embolism, lymphaticism; but for the sidewalk diagnosticians it is just labelled "heart attack."

Effect on Living

This does no harm to the victim but for us, the living, it may have very sad and troublesome consequences. If the taking-off is on the golf links, as mentioned, the other three members of the foursome following the following week develop vague pains around the heart and seek advice from a practitioner who solemnly takes the blood pressure, does an electrocardiogram and makes a pronouncement. It is a credit to the essential honesty of the medical profession that most of these announcements are reassuring. In these days when the conversational atmosphere is filled with "heart attacks," anybody, any time, may develop premonitory symptoms of dissolution. If he falls into the hands of an even mildly unscrupulous practitioner, he is putty in those hands. He can get the liver and lights scared out of him as thoroughly and rapidly as is ever possible to do so.

I had an instance of this the other day. An old friend of mine had been having some heart pain and had sought advice and was told that the third lead in the electrocardiogram was "suspicious" and that his tonsils should come out. He asked me to check up and even I could tell that his symptoms were not those of angina. The pain was not pain, but a sensation of awareness, it was continuous, it had no relation to exertion, it did not radiate, it wasn't in the right place. The stethoscopic examination of his heart was all right, and the third lead in the electrocardiogram was pronounced by our hospital expert to be normal. His tonsils could not be found at all, although we sent an exploring expedition after them.

Case Histories

I am induced to bring this subject up by the perusal of an article in a medical journal, just come to hand, which related the case histories of a number of people who complained of angina pectoris when the real trouble was a slight injury in the ligaments of the neck—many of them induced by so slight a thing as the sudden jerking when an automobile started.

Already mentioned in this column is the "slipping rib cartilage syndrome," which is another mechanical bony disorder, simulating angina.

Other imitators are pleurodynia, fatigue syndrome, shingles, radiculitis from spinal arthritis, pleurisy, pericardial rub.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

S. D.:—You recently recommended Elixir Terpin Hydrate and Codeine for coughing. I have to sign for it at a drug store and wonder whether there is a habit-forming drug in it. Will it hurt a person 75 years old? What would be the proper dose and how often should it be taken?

Answer: Elixir Terpin Hydrate and Codeine has a small amount of codeine in it. It is true that codeine is a habit-forming drug, but not in the amount present in this mixture, as is shown by the fact that it can be obtained without a doctor's prescription. The dosage is one teaspoonful four to eight times a day, as needed.

C. E. E.:—What are the causes and remedies for sciatica? Is it a nervous disease or rheumatism? Answer: Sciatica is a neuralgia of the sciatic nerve, which is brought on by the same things that cause rheumatism. Treatment consists in the use of heat and massage and is generally successful, although the condition is stubborn.

L. W.:—Which contains more calories, white bread or 100 per cent whole wheat bread? Answer: Calories per 100 grams: White bread, 248, whole wheat, 241. This is a negligible difference.

CHAPTER TWENTY

AS JEAN stood on the dark, fog-drenched hillside watching the gray mist closing in around the black shadow of the boat, hearing the dimming roar of the engine, her first sick shock of disappointment slowly gave way to bitter thought. Did this necessarily mean that Curley and Rosita were mixed up in some international smuggling or sabotage work? Or were they merely ignoring the law for a secret boat ride? They would think, those two, that such a risk would add to a ride's romantic value. Or maybe this was Curley's way of repaying Jean, herself, for her cool indifference. In her confused state of mind she hardly knew which was preferable, or what she ought to do about it. She could stay until they returned, of course.

Because the idea was abhorrent to her, she somehow felt it was a duty. Dismally she settled back down upon the cold rock, muttering they WOULD pick a night like this for a joyride.

Curley was complaining, too, as the unlighted boat picked its way slowly through the heavy seas, cleaving a path through the sheets of fog about it.

Rosita laughed. "My poor Curlee!" she taunted. She snuggled closer against him and took the light scarf from her shoulders to wrap about his neck.

"Hey!" Curley cut down the engine to protest. "Stop that! Do you want to freeze?"

Rosita knotted the scarf beneath his chin with a mischievous giggle. "Do you know what my mother did once?" she cried in a throaty voice of satisfaction.

Curley raised an eyebrow. "For Pancho?"

"For Pancho," the Mexican girl echoed reverently. "She waited for him once three nights and three days without food, out on the island, and then she took him to the hacienda on a night such as this in a small boat and hid him till the troops had gone. Miguel, he help her." The girl raised her small face. Her black hair streamed back in the damp wind. "Many times," she gloated, "my mother she hide the great desperado."

"Some guy, that Villa, eh?" Curley gave the eager girl a casual grin. She returned his glance with burning eyes.

"You could be great, my Curlee!" Curley chorled. "Who, ME?"

"Yes!" Her tiny hands clutched his arm in urgent coaxing. "You could be a great desperado—like Villa. You work hard."

Curley threw back his head and shouted with laughter. "If I work hard and be a bad boy, huh," he chorled. "And would you hide me from the troops, my little black angel?"

Her voice was solemn as an oath.

"I would hide you where my mother she hid him," she promised. "Where was that?"

She laughed with a tantalizing ring of power, and laid her small, cold cheek against his sleeve. "Some day," she murmured, eyes glowing with mischief, "see you are verree nice, I may have to tell you, my Curlee."

Curley cut the engine down still further. "Come on, you Mexican minx," he grinned. "Give out with the road map to this hideaway. After all, this job we're on now isn't exactly legal. The Coast Guard might show up any minute, and we'll have to spend the rest of the night there."

She shivered with hopeful delight, but kept her secret. "The Coast Guard won't come," she told him lightly.

"Now, how do you know that?" "Sometimes," she laughed mockingly. "My Curlee he is verree stupid. Did I not tell you I would learn that tonight in the chapel?"

"Sure you did," Curley agreed impatiently. "But I didn't see you learning it."

She laughed again. She was having a wonderful time. "There are many things I must each you. Many things that only Miguel and I know," she whispered. "I will tell you now about this one. Did you not see the candles on the altar?"

"Sure I did."

"Miguel, he light them."

"Okay. So what?"

Curley calculated thoughtfully. "Three, weren't there?"

"That is right!" She patted his arm proudly. "There were three for one verree good reason. Tonight, Miguel go to the small cliff which is above the Coast Guard station. He watch. Sometimes the Coast Guard boat she go north first, then south. Sometimes she go to the south, then to the north. When she go north first, then he put five candles on the altar and we do not go south to the island. But when she go south, then I see three candles and I know it will be safe to take the boat. The Coast Guard she will not be back until after the midnight."

"Not bad," Curley grinned admiringly. His grudging approval went to her head.

"You are luckee, my Curlee, you have found Rosita and Miguel to help you." In one swift, exultant movement, her arms were around him, her full petal lips crushed against his.

Curley thrust her away to make a dive for his sombrero that she had knocked off in her sudden assault.

"Hey, control yourself, you wild Latin!" he yelled as he secured the sombrero strap under his chin.

again. "Think the Coast Guard would believe my hat WALKED out here?"

She laughed at him adoringly as he glowered at her, absently watching him hunch his shoulders to light his cigaret, then hold his wristwatch to a small light on the dashboard.

He gave a sharply apprehensive whistle at the time. "We'd better be getting along, or we'll meet the cutter on the way back." He opened up the engine and the small boat roared ahead.

Time dragged on for Jean. Despite her heavy weariness, the stone continued to grow colder and harder. She felt chilled to the bone. She got up and tried walking up and down. The path was not made for speed, being too full of hidden holes. The soggy weeds swished about her ankles.

Twice she thought she heard the boat returning, but it was only an angrier boom of the surf. Once the eerie call of an owl frightened her. And she screamed outright as a long, white branch angled across the path like a crawling snake.

She made her way back to her rock and sank down on it again, her heart still pounding from its fright. This was a fool's errand she was on tonight, she told herself, and it would serve her right if she did break a leg or get bit by a snake. What would she discover further by staying on? Suppose they were out on business for a sabotage gang? They'd bring back orders—that's what they'd bring—which she wouldn't be able to see. Then why was she waiting?

But in her heart she knew she didn't believe they were on any mission more important than a romantic adventure. And she would know that by listening to them when they returned—even on a dark night she would know. And she would be free once and for all, then, of this attraction that plagued and maddened her.

After this half-thought of honesty, she felt easier. She curled into a more comfortable position on the rock. She remembered Melvin in the swift, slanting, New York days, when life had seemed bright and secure. And then all at once he was with her, in her kitchenette in the Lexington avenue apartment, making drinks for the gang on the chromium square of table and dishing the dirt—the inner dirt.

"Look, Toots," he was saying, cooking a wary eyebrow at the dining room door and lowering his voice to a confidential soto voce, "now this is absolutely in the family. But I'm telling you—"

She was awakened suddenly by a shock that sent an electric chill through her cold, numb body. She blinked dazedly into a bright light!

Do you have trouble getting all the sand out of the spinach? Try this method of cleaning it: Pick it over carefully, cutting off the roots. Now place it in a large bowl of warm water and lift the spinach up and down and allow to stand for three or four minutes. Then lift it out and put in a pan of cold water. The spinach must be lifted out of the water, as sand and dirt are at the bottom of the bowl. A second washing in warm water will make absolutely sure that every particle of grit has been removed.

Lutherans Asked To Aid In World Action Project

Trinity Lutheran church congregation is being asked to raise $430.80 as its Sunday service as its contribution to the church's World Action Service goal of $1,000,000.

The Rev. George L. Troutman is urging all members to return their contribution envelopes at the Sunday service.

The World Action Service will be conducted at 10:15 a. m.

In appealing for support, the church elders issued the following statement Saturday to all members of the congregation:

For eight co-operating branches of the Lutheran church—Sunday, May 23, was designated as the date for 10,000 Lutheran congregations, made up of 2,300,000 confirmed members to contribute $1,000,000 for Lutheran World Action, that our church abroad may be comforted in her distress—that our war prisoners may be given relief, and refugees helped in their poverty and desolation; so it again behooves us as a ministering church, to again do our Christian duty to all men, especially to those of the household of faith.

Mindful of this, we Lutherans again lay our hearts to the solemn obligations that these troublesome times impose upon us.

Owing to your committee being unable to properly publicize this important matter, and to obtain films showing the facts and circumstances to the congregation, the date for our offering has been set for Sunday morning service, on June 6.

Our service flag, the empty chairs at our tables, the vacant places in our Sunday School and other auxiliary Church Organizations, the familiar faces absent from our church services, all tell but one story; our young men and young women have gone forth from home because their country has called them to the colors.

These young folk are living in strange places—amid unusual surroundings; Home ties for the time being are severed, and their accustomed church activities have ceased; but their souls still yearn for the ministrations of the Word—Now, as never before, they need Christian Guidance and support, so that neither heart nor faith fail them, hence the great reason for our liberal support.

We realize, the total amount in money asked for, is large; but when measured with the magnitude of the work to be done, it seems very trivial. Of this huge sum of $1,000,000, our district committee on stewardship and finance has set the quota of our congregation at only $430.80. Because of the eighty-seven young men and women we already have in the service from our parish, we should be anxious and willing to more than meet our quota.

Just keep in mind what these eighty-seven young people are sacrificing for us—Not only their homes, families, friends, their church, and all auxiliary organizations therewith connected, together with all pleasures, privileges, and blessings belonging to each, but in some instances, sacrificing life or limb, that we here at home may continue to enjoy life and liberty, and the privilege of worshipping God as our conscience may dictate; which many supreme privileges are denied to many nations of the world today. If we take all of these facts into consideration, we are quite sure that our goal will easily be reached, and over-subscribed.

Our own church gave a fine demonstration of its willingness to co-operate in previous efforts, and we are certain will not fall or fall short at this time.

The WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON

An invasion was to be started it must include a predominant percentage of American troops.

This has been historic British policy—namely, that she fights on the sea and teams up with an ally which does the fighting on land. So it is not unreasonable to assume that Churchill stuck to this during his current talks with Roosevelt.

3. The submarine menace has been such that it is impossible to send a large body of U. S. troops to England. An invasion of Western Europe would require half a million Americans, assuming that Churchill would go in on a 50-50 basis, and despite the buoyant submarine statements of Frank Knox, so large a shipment could not be accomplished in a short time.

4. A 2nd Front through Spain is vigorously opposed by the Vatican, Archbishop Spellman and Church leaders.

5. An invasion of Italy would not be difficult, but after accomplishing it there are still the Alps—plus 40,000,000 hungry Italians to feed.

6. Finally there is a question of invasion through Turkey and the Balkans. It is quite conceivable that Churchill argued at some length for this. After all, it has been his thesis ever since the fateful Gallipoli campaign in 1915 that the easiest way to hit Germany was through Turkey and the Balkans.

However, there has been a century-old jealousy between Britain and Russia over the Dardanelles. At least one bitter war has been fought between them over this vital water outlet to land-locked Russia. And Stalin, the one Allied leader we are trying most to help with a 2nd Front, has been dead opposed to British operations around this vital gateway.

Finally, the Balkan invasion route is slow, roundabout and also hedged by mountains. It could not be started until the Axis Islands in the Mediterranean were all cleaned out, probably not before September.

And what Stalin wants is a 2nd Front now. By September the Red Army may have lost another million men and Moscow may have been taken.

ANGRY RUSSIA

If the above deductions are anywhere near correct, it is obvious that we will face an extremely difficult political problem with Russia. Stalin has argued for more than a year that his army had been left to bear the brunt of the attack alone. He has maintained that the first object of any military campaign was to engage the enemy, not conquer territory.

He also maintains that an Allied invasion across the Channel is the quickest, most efficient way to engage the enemy in large numbers. It would save Russia this Summer. There would be losses, heavy losses. But also, the Russians, he pointed out, they have taken losses, heavier losses than any other nation.

As to whether the Red Army can weather the terrific onslaught Hitler will hurl against it this Summer is a question to be discussed in another column. But if Russia does come through the next three months' ordeal, we will have an angry, sullen ally, nursing the belief that she has been deserted and in no mood to cooperate with us in the Far East, where Siberian bases are almost essential if we are to knock out Japan.

Therefore the effect on the Far East may be the most important repercussions from the recent Churchill-Roosevelt conversations.

OMAHA, Neb., June 5 — A bitter irony was echoed today in the death in naval action of Nile Clark Kinnick, Jr., former All-American halfback at the University of Iowa.

Go back to 1939, the year in which Kinnick won just about every football honor in sight — all-American, "athlete of the year," the Heisman award, the Maxwell trophy and the Touchdown Club's award in Washington D. C.

He came to New York to accept the Heisman award, proud and grateful to the nation that honored him. He said at the time:

His death was revealed yesterday by his parents in Omaha who were informed by the Navy department.

Meanwhile, a saddened sports world paid tribute to the captain of Iowa's "iron-man eleven." His old coach, Maj. Eddie Anderson, described Kinnick as a "man you'd trust your life with."

But perhaps the final word came from Nile's father, who said:

"Nile saw there was a job to do, and he knew he was one of the young men to do it."

LOS ANGELES, June 5 — Lieut. Louis Zamperini, the great University of Southern California mile runner who began his personal war on the Axis seven years ago, is missing in the South Pacific.

A War Department telegram brought the news to his mother, Mrs. Anthony Zamperini, of Torrance, yesterday. The message said Zamperini had been missing since May 27.

The runner in 1936 earned the enmity of the Axis and drew the fire of Hitler's chancellor guards when he tore down a Nazi flag in Berlin during the 1936 Olympics. Zamperini's mile record of 4 minutes, 8.3 seconds still stands in the N.C.A.A. books.

In 1941 the 25-year-old athlete gave up running and joined the army air forces. He was cited twice for heroism in the eight months he faced the Japs on the Pacific front. To the air medal he first won was added recently an oak leaf cluster.

CHICAGO, June 5—Seventeen horses were entered today in the $5,000 Steger handicap of the Lincoln Fields meeting to be run this afternoon at Hawthorne track. The six and a half furlong sprint for 3 year olds and up has drawn an exceptional field with Woolford farm's Signator and Pig Tails among the leading favorites. The pair ran one-two in the Crete Handicap two weeks ago but face tougher opposition today.

COUNT FLEET HELD AT 20-1 IN BIG STAKE

BELMONT PARK, New York, June 5—Count Fleet sought today to become the sixth great American race horse to win the triple crown of turfdom, and because of the lack of competition in the field it was regarded as a possibility that he would be sent toward a new record in the Belmont Stakes.

The Hertz hurricane was established as a one to 20 favorite in the 75th or diamond jubilee running of the venerable Belmont and was regarded as a certain winner by as many lengths as might suit Johnny Longden, who has ridden him in all his important starts.

His opponents in the triple-crown clincher, if they can be called that, were Fairy Manhurst from the Foxcatcher farms and Deseronto, owned by Beverley Beger.

If either of these two outsiders—which are competing strictly for the $5,000 second prize and $2,500 that goes to third—should out-foot the Count it would be the biggest upset in modern racing history. The favorite is so outstanding that they couldn't even find a horse to run for the $1,000 fourth prize.

GRID GAME OUT

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 5—There will be no varsity football team at Vanderbilt University this Fall, Chancellor O. C. Carmichael indicated today. "Some football may be played," the chancellor said in his report to the school's board of directors, "but clearly there can be no varsity team." He said that only three of the school's 1942 players would return to the campus in September.

MORT COOPER GIVES SINGLE BLOW TO PHILS

Cardinal Star Does Fine Job On Mound For 1942
World's Champions

NEWSOM WINS ANOTHER

Chicago Cubs Score New Low For Year; Gordon Helps Yankees

By Lawton Carver

NEW YORK, June 5—The St. Louis Cardinals have one thing, among others, that will make them tough to take this season. They have Mort Cooper, the man who can win his 20 or so games, but who, and this is important, can step in there in the clutch and win a game when a losing streak is staring the Cards in the face.

He didn't do so hot in the world series against the New York Yankees last year. He started twice, lost one game and didn't finish with any blazes of glory leading up around him. But the Cardinals won the series just as they had won the National league pennant.

Last season he led the National in victories with 22 against seven defeats and with that reached his all-time peak in effectiveness.

Right now he is breezing along again. He held the Philadelphia Phillies to a single last night in a 5 to 0 triumph which came close behind his one-hitter against the Dodgers last Monday in his last start.

He will be among the leading hurlers again at the close of the season. And may be the best in the majors. So far he has won six and lost three.

The Chicago Cubs, floundering all season, today were credited with reaching a new all-time low for 1943 in the baseball parade.

The club which was picked by many to wind-up in the first division and named by a few as pennant possibilities sunk deeper into the cellar under an 18 to 5 laceration by the Brooklyn Dodgers yesterday.

The Dodgers made seven of their runs with two out in the first inning and went on from there to make an utter shambles of the premises as they protected their National league lead with a one-sided conquest.

Sixth For Buck

The victory went to Buck Newsom, who thus scored his sixth of the season.

Meantime the St. Louis Cardinals were staying up there close to the Dodgers with a 5 to 6 victory over Philadelphia Phillies. Mort Cooper hurled this triumph and for the second consecutive game allowed only one hit. He has won six against three defeats.

The victories by the Dodgers and the Cardinals left the latter just one game behind the Dodgers in the standings.

In the only other National league contest, the Pittsburgh Pirates flattened the New York Giants, 9 to 8, the winning inn being the fourth when Vince DiMaggio hit his seventh homer of the season with two on.

Joe Gordon's 10th inning two-run home run gave the New York Yankees a 6 to 4 victory over the St. Louis Browns to leave the Yanks out in front in the American league.

Detroit took over second place in the standings by beating Washington, 2 to 1.

The Chicago White Sox scored four runs in the first inning to down the Boston Red Sox, 4 to 3. Southpaw Al Smith allowed only four hits as the Cleveland Indians pounded out a 3 to 2 triumph over the Philadelphia Athletics.

The Indians made 12 hits in clinching the victory.

COUNT FLEET HELD AT 20-1 IN BIG STAKE

BELMONT PARK, New York, June 5—Count Fleet sought today to become the sixth great American race horse to win the triple crown of turfdom, and because of the lack of competition in the field it was regarded as a possibility that he would be sent toward a new record in the Belmont Stakes.

The Hertz hurricane was established as a one to 20 favorite in the 75th or diamond jubilee running of the venerable Belmont and was regarded as a certain winner by as many lengths as might suit Johnny Longden, who has ridden him in all his important starts.

His opponents in the triple-crown clincher, if they can be called that, were Fairy Manhurst from the Foxcatcher farms and Deseronto, owned by Beverley Bogert.

If either of these two outsiders—which are competing strictly for the $5,000 second prize and $2,500 that goes to third—should out-foot the Count it would be the biggest upset in modern racing history. The favorite is so outstanding that they couldn't even find a horse to run for the $1,000 fourth prize.

Winner of the Wood Memorial, the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness and the Withers, at varying distances, he will try his hand now at 1 1/2 miles and conceivably will set up a new mark to supplant the track record of 2:27-3/5 on a lightning fast strip by Bolingbroke last year.

GRID GAME OUT

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 5—There will be no varsity football team at Vanderbilt university this Fall. Chancellor O. C. Carmichael indicated today. "Some football may be played," the chancellor said in his report to the school's board of directors, "but clearly there can be no varsity team." He said that only three of the school's 1942 players would return to the campus in September.

17 IN STEGER TEST

CHICAGO, June 5—Seventeen horses were entered today in the $5,000 Steger handicap at the Lincoln Fields meeting to be run this afternoon at Hawthorne track. The six and a half furlong sprint for 3 year olds and up has drawn an exceptional field with Woolford an exceptional field with Woolford among the leading favorites. The pair ran one-two in the Creta Handicap two weeks ago but face tougher opposition today.

phly as the "grid player of the year," became a naval air cadet in 1941 and won his wings at a Florida training station. This Spring he was assigned to duty on an aircraft carrier, according to his parents, who revealed Navy department disclosure of his death.

Festivities To Mark Opening Of Ball Loop Sunday At Lewis Park

Methodists and Junior Chamber of Commerce and South Bloomfield and Williamsport softball teams will tangle Sunday afternoon at the Ted Lewis recreation center when the lid is pried off the new Circleville softball league.

The first game, between the Methodists and Jaycees, will get under way at 2 o'clock.

Elliott White, league president, conducted a meeting of team managers Friday evening at which time pairings for the first two weeks were drawn up. The league is rather unwieldy since nine teams are represented, Sunday games being necessary to complete the schedule.

Plenty of festivities are being planned for the Sunday lull after with the city's official family to be represented. The first ball will be pitched by Mayor Ben H. Gordon, with Police Chief W. F. McCrady as the batter. Safety-Service Director Clarence Helvering will be the catcher, and Richard Hedges of the state highway department will be the honorary umpire.

Games for next week, all starting at 6:30, will include:
Monday: Blue Ribbon Dairy vs. Colored team.
Tuesday: Circleville Oil vs. Stoutsville.
Wednesday: Lutherans vs. Methodists.
Thursday: Jaycees vs. South Bloomfield.

The league's only means of providing money with which to operate is by taking a collection at each game, the public being asked to cooperate.

MORT COOPER GIVES SINGLE BLOW TO PHILS

Cardinal Star Does Fine Job On Mound For 1942
World's Champions

NEWSOM WINS ANOTHER

Chicago Cubs Score New Low For Year; Gordon Helps Yankees

By Lawton Carver

NEW YORK, June 5—The St. Louis Cardinals have one thing, among others, that will make them tough to take this season. They have Mort Cooper, the man who can win his 20 or so games, but who, and this is important, can step in there in the clutch and win a game when a losing streak is staring the Cards in the face.

He didn't do so hot in the world series against the New York Yankees last year. He started twice, lost one game and didn't finish with any blazes of glory leading up around him. But the Cardinals won the series just as they had won the National league pennant.

Last season he led the National in victories with 22 against seven defeats and with that reached his all-time peak in effectiveness.

Right now he is breezing along again. He held the Philadelphia Phillies to a single last night in a 5 to 0 triumph which came close behind his one-hitter against the Dodgers last Monday in his last start.

He will be among the leading hurlers again at the close of the season. And may be the best in the majors. So far he has won six and lost three.

The Chicago Cubs, floundering all season, today were credited with reaching a new all-time low for 1943 in the baseball parade.

The club which was picked by many to wind-up in the first division and named by a few as penultimate possibilities sunk deeper into the cellar under an 18 to 5 laceration by the Brooklyn Dodgers yesterday.

The Dodgers made seven of their runs with two out in the first inning and went on from there to make an utter shambles of the premises as they protected their National league lead with a one-sided conquest.

Sixth For Buck
The victory went to Buck Newsom, who thus scored his sixth of the season.

Meantime the St. Louis Cardinals were staying up there close to the Dodgers with a 5 to 0 victory over Philadelphia Phillies. Mort Cooper hurled this triumph and for the second consecutive game allowed only one hit. He has won six against three defeats.

The victories by the Dodgers and the Cardinals left the latter just one game behind the Dodgers in the standings.

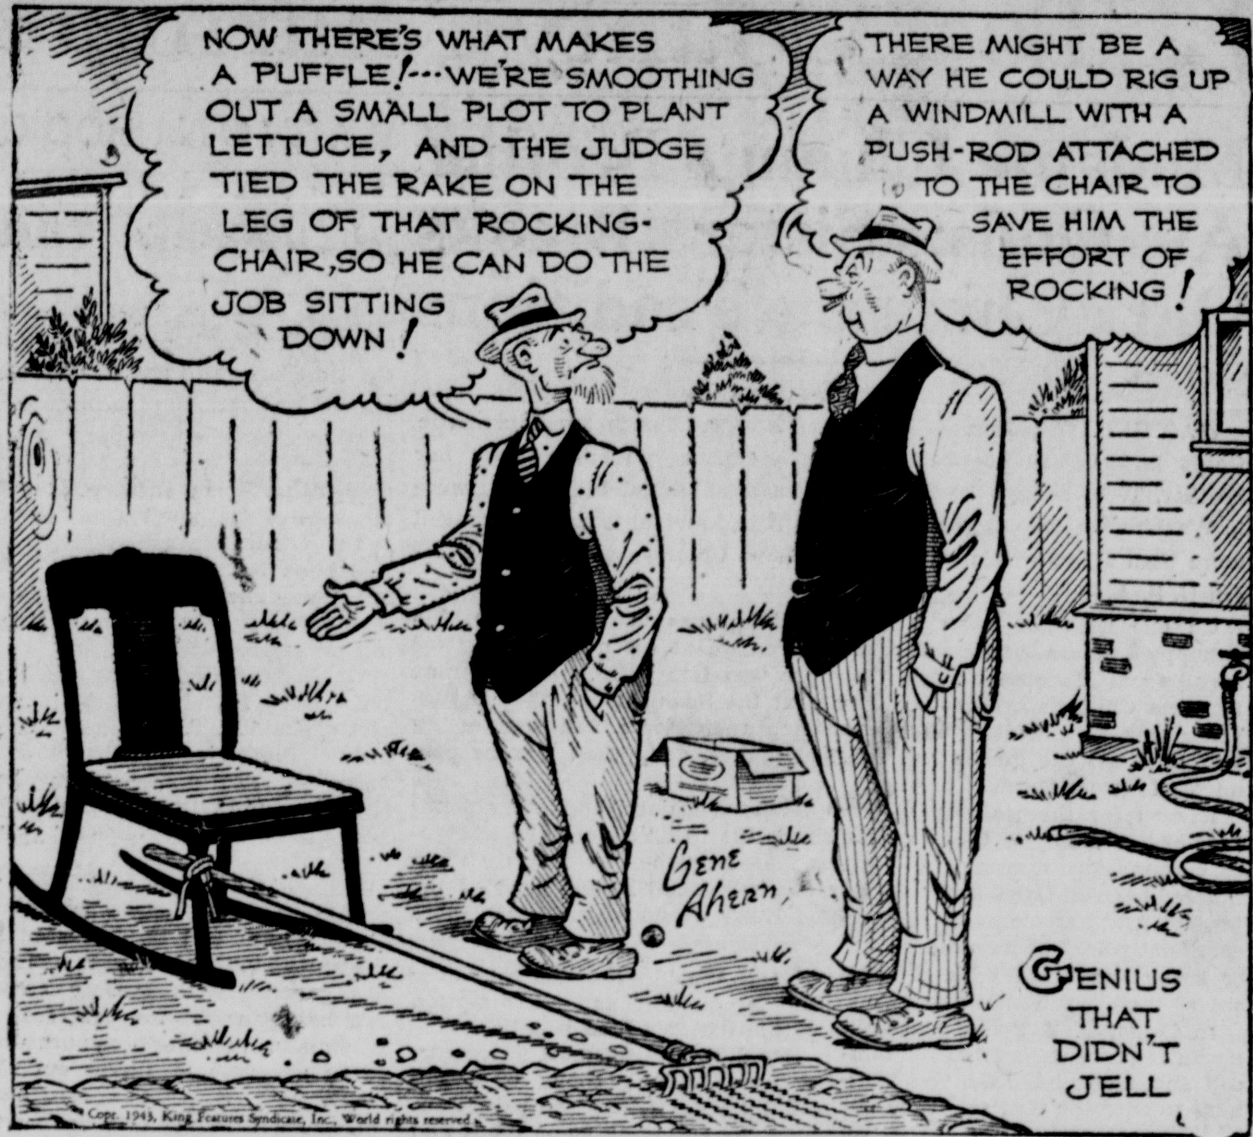

In the only other National league contest, the Pittsburgh Pirates flattened the New York Giants, 9 to 8, the winning inning being the fourth when Vince DiMaggio hit his seventh homer of the season with two on.

Joe Gordon's 10th inning two-run home run gave the New York Yankees a 6 to 4 victory over the St. Louis Browns to leave the Yanks out in front in the American league.

Detroit took over second place in the standings by beating Washington, 2 to 1.

CLAPPER FROM LONDON

Raymond Clapper, who has been in Sweden for over a month, will return to his program over the Mutual Network, Monday night, June 7, at 10 p. m. The program is heard Mondays and Thursdays at the same time.
After great delay, Clapper has finally made arrangements to get from Sweden to London, England, in time for the broadcast. Because broadcasting facilities were not available in Sweden, Paul Sullivan, well known radio newsmen, has been pinch-hitting for Clapper during the last few weeks. Sullivan will "stand by" in the Mutual studios in New York, to go on the air should the London reception not prove favorable.
Clapper may have some important information that he was unable to cable Sullivan because of Sweden's rigid censorship.

Other contributions include Lillian Leonard, balladeer, in "Teasing," Danny Donovan, in "Turn Back the Universe," sweet Jenny Lynn warbling "My Old Kentucky Home" and the eight-voice mixed chorus singing "Bluebell." The entire ensemble brings the program to a stirring finish with "Battle Cry of Freedom."

PRAISES LUMBERMEN

TOLEDO, Ore., — Workers in Lincoln County's major industries, lumbering and logging, were told that they contributed as much to the Allied offensive in Africa as the soldiers who used the wooden materials. Brig. Gen. Lucius D. Clary, U. S. Army Assistant Chief of Staff for Materials, notified the workers of the vital need for wood in the war effort. "We are looking to the Pacific Northwest for more lumber — the raw material of victory," the telegram read.

State Highway Department Offers Aid To County Farmers.

CROP DELAY PROMPTS ACT

County Agent And Ag War Board To Decide Where Help Is Necessary

Pickaway county farmers and those of other Ohio agricultural districts who are far behind in their work because of an extremely wet May were offered assistance Saturday by the state highway department. The department is making 175 of its tractors and its crews which have been working on roadside weed cutting jobs available for farm plowing immediately.

Richard Hedges, Pickaway county official of the highway department, informed F. K. Blair, Pickaway farm agent, that the tractors and crews are available. An average of two tractors is available for each county. The county agent, working with the Pickaway county U. S. department of agriculture War Board, will decide where the tractors can be used to the best advantage. Farmers needing tractors to help in their work are urged to contact Mr. Blair at the post-office or by telephone, No. 465.

Planting Delayed
Corn planting has been delayed several weeks because of adverse weather conditions. However, during the last week thousands of acres of corn have been planted in the Pickaway county area, weather being perfect all this week. There are still hundreds more acres to plow and plant.

Mr. Hedges said the larger models can pull two 12-inch plows or larger sized harrows. The smaller models can pull one 14-inch plow or a smaller harrow. These will be rented to the farmer at a nominal rate.

"The farmer will pay the operator and will furnish the fuel and all other equipment," said Hedges.

The farm assistance will delay the highway department's weed cutting program normally under way at this time, but Hedges said:

Food Preferred

"It is a matter of more food or more weeds. I believe the public will tolerate the weeds until the farm crisis passes."

Some farms will require use of the state tractors three days, said Guy Dowdy of the Ohio State university agriculture extension division. He predicted that much work would be done at night. Two operators, working in shifts, probably will plow around the clock in an effort to roll back the planting season. Dowdy is a former Pickaway county agent.

Director H. C. Ramsower, of the extension division, hailed the highway department program as

RUM PURCHASES UNDER RATION MODERATE, QUIET

Liquor purchases under the new state rationing system which went into effect June 1, have been moderate and orderly, although 1,500,000 Ohioans were eligible to buy package liquor at retail, State Liquor Director Don A. Fisher said Saturday.

During this period sales were made chiefly to persons who completed their rationing registration and received their ration cards by Saturday, May 29.

Applicants who are incapacitated or who do not have war ration book No. 2, but who have returned their applications with a required supplemental form, also were eligible to purchase package liquor during the initial ration period.

Incapacitated persons, those aged or otherwise infirm and unable to appear in person for their application forms and books, may do so through an agent.

a "genuine service to the farmer, the state and the nation."

"Every day's delay in corn planting will cut production materially," he said. "The additional power made available by the state for plowing is distinctly of outstanding assistance in what is a national emergency, especially in the corn belt."

POST WAR PLANS CALL FOR TWO DAMS IN COUNTY

Five Scioto-Sandusky Conservancy district projects, including two in Pickaway county, are being promoted in congress to help provide post war employment. Announcement of the program was made Friday in Chillicothe by E. F. Bearce, president of the conservancy.

Mr. Bearce said the projects would be authorized in a bill now being prepared.

Projects requested include dams in Darby and Deer creeks in Pickaway county, a reservoir at Delaware, and dams in Paint and Rocky Ford creeks in Ross county.

These projects have been taken before congress at other times, but nothing definite has ever been done about them.

Madame Chiang, Brother At Odds; Sister Breaks Old Chinese Traditions

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON, June 5—No longer a secret inside the Diplomatic Corps is the jealousy between Madame Chiang Kai-shek and her brother, T. V. Soong, the Foreign Minister of China. While they were in Washington they did not speak, and it is doubtful if they exchanged more than a few words all during Madame Chiang's visit in the Eastern U. S. A.

On one occasion when Madame Chiang was in Washington, the unhappy Chinese Ambassador had to remain at his home hoping for a call from Madame Chiang, therefore was late getting to dinner at Madame Chiang's brother's. Arriving at the Soong house, the Ambassador was kept waiting in the drawing room for a full hour and a half until all the guests had finished dinner. Only then was he permitted to greet them.

Reason for the jealousy between Madame Chiang and other members of her family is the fact that she is the "kid" sister. And suddenly through her marriage to Chiang Kai-shek she has taken all the limelight. Ordinarily, in China, her brother would be the head of the family. And her older sister, Madame Kung would play a much more dominant role. But now the younger sister has eased both of them out of their traditional place.

In China, T. V. Soong had built up an important position for himself and, his critics said, was planning to ease the Generalissimo out of his place as head of China. He even had his own trained guards. However, while he was out of the country conferring with the international bankers, Chiang Kai-shek took over Soong's guards, transferred them into the army, and Brother T. V. came back to find himself shorn of power. Now Soong remains more or less permanently in this country.

However, the Generalissimo likes T. V., and they get along far better than T. V. gets along with his own sister.

Note: It was one of Madame Chiang's nieces, Miss Kung who got people in the White House so upset by her manner. Not satisfied with the White House service, she picked up the telephone to call Secretary of State Hull to complain to him personally. Fortunately before the call could go through, someone persuaded her that this was not the thing to do.

DOUBLE-SHIFT STIMSON

Secretary of War Henry Stimson's backing and filling on the Kilday bill, which would give fathers deferment priority over single men and married men without children, has left the young author of the legislation, Representative Paul Kilday of Texas, slightly bewildered.

All in all, the Secretary of War took three different positions.

When the bill was before the House Military committee, Stimson condemned it as unworkable.

Later, in a letter to the House Rules committee, he took Position No. 2. He averred that the War Department "would have no objection" to the measure if the Military committee interpreted it properly.

Specifically, Stimson took exception to a Military committee report construing the bill to mean that ALL single men and men without children should be "inducted" prior to fathers. He pointed out that because of shifts in population and other factors, no Selective Service director could be sure that every single man in a State had been called up, which might bar the inducting of fathers needed in the service.

If the phrase, "called for induction" (with respect to single men and husbands without children) were substituted, Stimson said, this would not preclude the induction of fathers and the legislation would be satisfactory. The House Military committee promptly made the desired change in a supplemental report, stating: "Therefore, it will be seen that the committee is in agreement with the War Department as to the proper construction of the bill."

However, Kilday and the committee were due for a rude awakening about six weeks later when the Senate Military Affairs committee voted to shelve the father-deferment bill. It developed that the adverse vote was inspired chiefly by a letter from Secretary Stimson. This was the third different position he had taken. This time he stated that the bill couldn't be administered "without seriously reducing the orderly flow of men into the Army in the proper numbers and with the appropriate qualifications."

"I can understand a man reversing himself once, but not twice," groans Kilday.

RATION BOOKS TO BE ISSUED IN AMPLE TIME

Every person in Ohio will have his war ration book No. 3 when the time comes to use it, OPA declared emphatically Saturday in denying published reports that many persons who filled out their application form incorrectly will not receive the new ration book.

The OPA pointed out that ration book No. 3 may not be used for some time and ridiculed statements that it is behind in the mailing program.

"It is true that many applications have been filled out incorrectly," said H. T. Beckmann, OPA district director, "but that doesn't mean we are going to deprive these people of their ration books and above all no one is going hungry."

He said OPA has established a procedure where minor errors in applications can be corrected at the state mailing center in Columbus. Those with glaring errors will be returned for correction. Beckmann cautioned applications to be accurate in filling out the blanks.

Reports that OPA is behind in its mailing schedule obviously are false, OPA said, because volunteers will not begin writing ration books until next Monday. It hopes to finish the job by July 21.

CLOSE WATCH ON DOGS URGED BY HEALTH CHIEF

Clarence Helvering, acting health commissioner issued an appeal Saturday to Circleville owners of dogs which have been running loose to keep them under observation for the next two weeks to determine whether they might have been bitten by the rabid dog owned by Edward Phebus. The Phebus dog died Monday night and an examination of its head proved that it was rabid. The dog had been loose in the north end for several days before it died, and there is possibility that it might have bitten other dogs in addition to several in the immediate neighborhood. The Phebus family lives on Seyfert avenue.

WAGE CONTROL SHIFT TO DAVIS, PLEA OF CANNERS

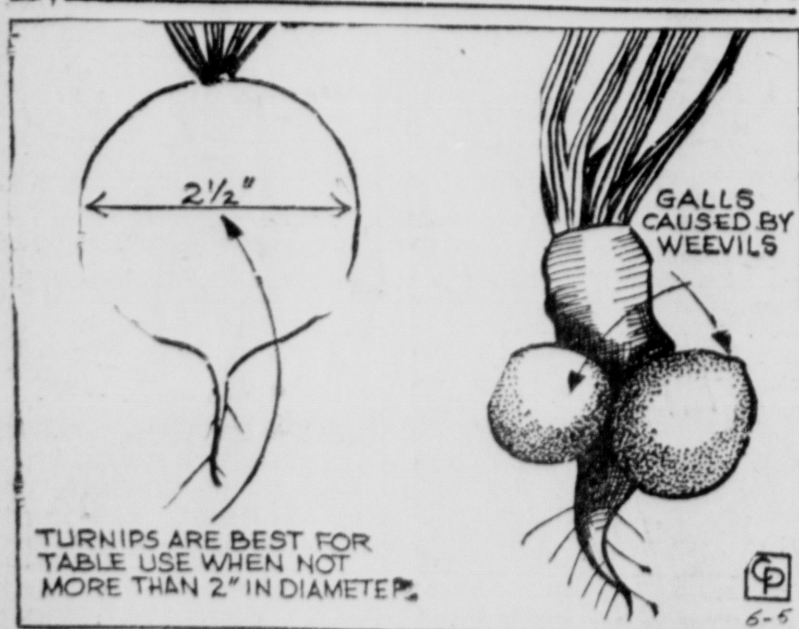

National Canners' association, with which all Circleville and Pickaway county canneries are affiliated, has asked that wage control for the canning industry be removed from the War Labor Board and given to Chester Davis, food administrator.

Announcement during the week that a 50 cent base pay would be received by canning plant workers was revised somewhat Saturday when several canners said there would be a differential of several cents in both directions from the 50 cent figure to take care of skilled and unskilled workmen.

Today's VICTORY GARDEN-GRAPH

"Follow-Up Crops" for Victory Garden

By DEAN HALLIDAY
Released by Central Press Association

A "FOLLOW-UP" planting system can be employed to make the Victory garden a complete success, especially if space is limited.

Turnips are considered an excellent "fill-in" or "follow-up" vegetable. They can be planted in vacant spaces where early planted seeds have failed to sprout or they can be used to follow an early crop.

Like all quick-growing vegetables, turnips, to be at their best, should be used for the table when not more than two or three inches in diameter, as illustrated in the accompanying Garden-Graph. As turnips grow larger they become tough and woody and the flavor stronger.

Plant turnip seeds about 1/4 to 1/2 inch deep in the soil. When the plants reach a height of two or three inches thin them, leaving about five or six inches between the plants. The thinnings make delicious boiled greens.

When harvesting turnips burn any which are found to be deformed by swellings such as illustrated. These swellings are caused by the gall weevil. The soil in which deformed turnips have grown should be treated with quick lime to kill the insect gall weevils. Use one bushel of lime to a square rod of soil area.

County Agent And Ag War Board To Decide Where Help Is Necessary

Pickaway county farmers and those of other Ohio agricultural districts who are far behind in their work because of an extremely wet May were offered assistance Saturday by the state highway department. The department is making 175 of its tractors and its crews which have been working on roadside weed cutting jobs available for farm plowing immediately.

Richard Hedges, Pickaway county official of the highway department, informed F. K. Blair, Pickaway farm agent, that the tractors and crews are available. An average of two tractors is available for each county. The county agent, working with the Pickaway county U. S. department of agriculture War Board, will decide where the tractors can be used to the best advantage. Farmers needing tractors to help in their work are urged to contact Mr. Blair at the post-office or by telephone, No. 465.

Planting Delayed

Corn planting has been delayed several weeks because of adverse weather conditions. However, during the last week thousands of acres of corn have been planted in the Pickaway county area, weather being perfect all this week. There are still hundreds more acres to plow and plant.

Mr. Hedges said the larger models can pull two 12-inch plows or larger sized harrows. The smaller models can pull one 14-inch plow or a smaller harrow. These will be rented to the farmer at a nominal rate.

"The farmer will pay the operator and will furnish the fuel and all other equipment," said Hedges.

The farm assistance will delay the highway department's weed cutting program normally under way at this time, but Hedges said:

Food Preferred

"It is a matter of more food or more weeds. I believe the public will tolerate the weeds until the farm crisis passes."

Some farms will require use of the state tractors three days, said Guy Dowdy of the Ohio State university agriculture extension division. He predicted that much work would be done at night. Two operators, working in shifts, probably will plow around the clock in an effort to roll back the planting season. Dowdy is a former Pickaway county agent.

Director H. C. Ramsower, of the extension division, hailed the highway department program as

RUM PURCHASES UNDER RATION MODERATE, QUIET

Liquor purchases under the new state rationing system which went into effect June 1, have been moderate and orderly, although 1,500,000 Ohioans were eligible to buy package liquor at retail, State Liquor Director Don A. Fisher said Saturday.

During this period sales were made chiefly to persons who completed their rationing registration and received their ration cards by Saturday, May 29.

Applicants who are incapacitated or who do not have war ration book No. 2, but who have returned their applications with a required supplemental form, also were eligible to purchase package liquor during the initial ration period.

Incapacitated persons, those aged or otherwise infirm and unable to appear in person for their application forms and books, may do so through an agent.

LESS HOGS, MORE COWS
Few people realize the extent of the Washington control over the production and consumption of the nation's food supplies.

By dispensing benefit payments, or by withholding them; by establishing price floors and price ceilings; by rationing some foods and not rationing others; by removing some foods from civilian markets entirely, the Government sits like an engineer before an instrument panel.

A twist of this valve will bring up the production of pork, and a turn of another will alter the eating habits of the entire nation.

The twists about to be made are in favor of higher production of dairy products and lower production of hogs. Hog numbers have been increased greatly, but the animals are eating us out of grain.

Washington experts therefore have made a study of what they call the "nutritive contribution" of different types of livestock products, considering the expense of feed, land, and labor involved. Here are the conclusions:

1. Hogs will return more calories per unit of livestock feed than any other type of livestock. Whole milk from dairy cows is next in value.

2. But dairy products return more protein than hogs do, or than any other livestock product. And protein is a more critical item in the diet than calories.

3. In terms of labor cost, dairy products are the most efficient, eggs are second, while cattle and hogs tie for third place.

4. In terms of land cost, dairy products yield more proteins per acre than any other animal product.

The final conclusion is that "our best utilization of labor, feed, and land would require further emphasis upon dairy production and on complete utilization of dairy products."

This means that the people sitting at the control panel in Washington are closing the throttle marked "pork," closing another throttle marked "fat cattle," and opening the throttle marked "milk."

Both farmers and consumers may soon expect directives from Washington to put these findings into effect.
